transition period from the dry season of summer to the rainy season of winter. The bottom lands also produce immense beats, pumpkins, and other garden truck.

From the latest reliably compiled reports of the State Dairying Bureau, we find that Marin is the largest butter producing county, and one of our first-class dairies is a thing to be inspected with pleasure, profit and interest.

No portion of the State of California is better supplied by nature and man with the facilities for the cheap handling of freight and the transit of passenger. The entire length of the county is traversed by two lines of railroads, namely: The California Northwestern Railway Company and The North Pacific Coast Railroad Company.

The picturesque beauty of Marin County has a reputation that extends far beyond the limits of the Pacific Coast. While not partaking of the grand and sublime features of the high Sierras, the scenery combines beauties and effects that are none the less pleasing to the eye. Mount Tamalpais, though not of imposing altitude, nevertheless looks every inch a mountain, and has a sweeping contour that is the ideal of grace.

That Marin County will some day support a dense and prosperous population, none doubts who has examined the facts impartially. The present generation will see it rise from the ashes of the past and take its place among the leading counties of California.
