

to create and organize the University of California. The mission of the College is accomplished, a University which will be complete in all its departments, having been established.

THE COLLEGE SCHOOL.

As stated above, the Rev. Henry Durant was Principal of the College School from 1853 to 1860. From 1860 until the present time, the Rev. I. H. Brayton has been Principal of the School, having for eight years enjoyed the assistance of F. M. Campbell, M. A., in conducting the School, and having been assisted during the last year by the Rev. E. G. Beckwith.

In 1865, the Trustees of the College ceased to retain proprietary control of the College School, though continuing to exercise supervisory oversight, and stipulating that the original purposes in its establishment should be adhered to.

The Institution employs fifteen Professors and Teachers, and has an attendance of about 250 pupils. It is acknowledged the largest Institution of its class upon this coast. Its extensive, improved grounds, and numerous, large and fine buildings, will amply repay a visit.

As the founders of the College School had in mind the leading purpose of establishing a college, it led to a complete organization and a fuller provision than is customary in academies where colleges are already in existence. Hence the College School, as now distinct from the College of California, has as ample provisions as many colleges. Its property is estimated at one hundred thousand dollars. There are three well organized Departments; the Classical or Preparatory, the Higher English, and the Junior, the latter being divided into two grades, of which the lowest is intended for very young pupils, who are separated from the older students both in the school-rooms and on the play grounds. The buildings are spacious, commodious, well furnished, and comfortable. Accommodations are provided for two hundred boarding pupils.
