

in August, and ends with the second Thursday in May. There will be a recess from the 20th of December to the 3d of January.

Credible evidence of piety, membership in some Evangelical Christian Church, a collegiate education, or such other literary and scientific attainments as promise a fair degree of usefulness, will entitle all young men to the advantages of this seminary.

Relative to expenses, the Trustees have the following in their circular:

"There will be no charge for tuition, rent of rooms, or use of furniture. The Trustees will, so far as practicable, furnish text books and reference books free to those who are in need; themselves being the judges of the necessity. Those who are so disposed can live very economically in Oakland or San Francisco. It is thought that one dollar a day will meet all the absolutely necessary expenses of an economical person; fifty per cent. more could be used to advantage; a hundred per cent. more would not be deemed very extravagant.

"The American Education Society will render aid to the pupils of this seminary who are especially needy, and who take the full course of three years. The amount bestowed will be $80 or $100 a year (in currency) to each beneficiary."

GOLDEN GATE ACADEMY.

This institution is situated upon the crown of Academy Hill, near Telegraph Avenue, about a mile from the foot of Broadway, Oakland. Academy Hill rises some eighty-five feet above the bay, affording a fine view of Oakland, San Francisco, and the Golden Gate. The school occupies three buildings, which are large and well appointed in every particular. Each building has its separate grounds, comprising, in all, some ten acres. The institution was opened in 1873 as a boys' preparatory school, and as such, under the efficient management of its trustees attained to a wide reputation. But inasmuch as the University of California and many of the best eastern colleges were opened to students of both sexes, the demand for college preparatory training for young women greatly increased, and it was determined to add a ladies' department and still further extend the sphere of the school. These changes were instituted under the direction of J. N. Haskins and A. E. Kellogg, to whom the sole charge and management of the school is intrusted for a term of years, commencing August 1, 1875. The academy now began a new life. A commercial, a modern language, a music, and an art department were added, and their management entrusted to teachers of recognized ability and large experience in their chosen fields of labor, so that, in the completeness of its course of study, and in the range of its departments, the academy now stands unsurpassed by any similar institution in the State.

The design of the school, as expressed by the principals, is "to furnish a thorough preparatory education for our best colleges, together with a course of English studies of sufficiently wide range to prepare students for positions as teachers, or for general business. To give, by aid of our preparatory department, systematic training to pupils of both sexes, taking them at an early age and carefully directing their education during the most important period of study; and to furnish, by our commercial, modern language, music, and art departments, superior advantages in these special studies; and, above all, to awaken in every student an imperishable love of study." While it is the determination of the principals to establish the great preparatory school of the State—a school teaching something more than the accomplishments—nothing has been neglected which could contribute to a polished education. The departments of music and art are directed by enthusiastic teachers, and are first class in every particular.
