Streets.

The natural conformation of the surface of the city obviates the expense of heavy grades, while the abundance of rock in closely neighboring quarries has made good solid highways attainable at moderate cost. The city has generally excellent streets and has a comprehensive system of sewerage. The completion of the great main sewer has provided drainage facilities for nearly the entire city, and the figures given below show that the people are enterprising and determined to maintain their superiority in this respect as well as others. Grading, curbing, macadamizing and the laying of sidewalks has gone forward rapidly during the year.

We publish a detailed statement which we have copied from the Transcript, as best authority, of all street improvements for the year. The location of the work done and the cost of each division of this branch of public improvement will be of interest to many persons, both at home and abroad.
