Albany, Linn Co. P. O., County seat and Incorporated city, of 2,000 inhabitants, is situated on the east bank of the Willamette, 75 miles south of Portland, and is the most extensive shipping point on the river south of that city. The fine navigable stream along the city front, and the rich agricultural section surrounding it, give Albany rare commercial advantages, and the bright prosperity it enjoys is a proof of its eligible situation. The town is well built, substantial brick blocks, hotels and business houses adorn its principal streets, while the neatness of the suburbs indicates the refinement and character of the inhabitants. The Court House is a fine brick building, costing $35,000, and is an ornament to the place. The educational and religious institutions are of a high order. A college is established in the city under the auspices of the Presbyterian Church, and the public school occupies a noble building capable of accommodating two hundred pupils. Four church societies own their own houses of worship, two Presbyterian, one Methodist, and one Baptist, and the Southern Methodists and Campbellites have services in rented buildings. The secret societies are represented by a Royal Arch Chapter and Lodge of Masons, Encampment and Lodge of Odd Fellows, and a Lodge of Good Templars. A Fire Company of 60 members with a hand engine, and other necessary apparatus, constitutes the Fire Department. A large canal, 13 miles in length with a width on top of 25 feet, brings the water of the South Santiam to Albany, where it is used as a power for manufacturing, having a pressure of 36 feet at the river bank of the Willamette. A large amount of machinery is moved by this and other water power in the city, and steam is also brought into requisition. Several saw, planing, and flouring mills, machine shops, foundries, sash and door factories, carriage and wagon shops, and other manufacturing industries give life to the town. There are two elevators and six grain warehouses capable of storing at one time 800,000 bushels. The Oregon and California Railroad, as well as the navigable river, give ready means of transportation, and a branch railroad running direct to the grain warehouses and mills make shipments easy. Three newspapers are published weekly, the Albany Register, the State Rights Democrat, and the Oregon Granger.
