Scio, Linn Co, P O 15 miles n e of Albany, is an incorporated city of 200 inhabitants, and the commercial town of the region known as "The Forks of the Santiam." The surrounding country is quite fertile, and with improved communication with the great routes of trade and travel, would rapidly advance in prosperity. For this purpose it has been proposed to build a branch railroad to Marlon Station, 6 miles distant, on the Oregon and California Railroad. A daily stage now connects with the trains on the railroad, giving quick communication with Portland and the Capital.

Scottsburg, Douglas Co, P O 56 miles n
west of Roseburg, on the lower Umpqua at the head of navigation on that river, and 26 miles from its entrance into the ocean. The town is in a very interesting section of country, stored with wealth which only needs the hand of industry, aided by capital and intelligently applied, to develop it, and make this one of the most important districts of the State. The river below Scottsburg is a broad, clear and beautiful stream, though obstructed in one or two places by rapids, with a harbor at its mouth admitting large vessels, but having a bar off the coast, which is dangerous to pass in rough weather. The prolific fisheries, the grand forests, and the rich agricultural and grazing lands of the upper valley, constitute a resource capable of supporting a large town. It has a district school, a lodge of Good Templars, and other social institutions. A small steamer plies between Scottsburg and Gardiner.
