

STREET AND AVENUE GUIDE.

THE original town site of Oakland is laid out in blocks three hundred feet in length from east to west, and two hundred feet in breadth from north to south, streets running at right angles. This portion of the present city extends from the water line formed by Lake Merritt and San Antonio Creek on the east and south, to Fourteenth street on the north and Market street on the west. The territory bounded by Market street on the east and by San Francisco Bay on the west, has been laid out in general, though not universal conformity to the plan of Oakland proper. North of Fourteenth street and west of San Pablo avenue, there is a good degree of regularity; but to the eastward of San Pablo avenue the land has been subdivided according to the caprice of the owners of the numerous "tracts" which, from time to time, have been placed on the market in the shape of city lots. Hence, the streets in this part of the city have little continuity or regularity. The great thoroughfares of San Pablo and Telegraph avenues, and Market street, tri-sect the city diagonally, giving a triangular form to a large amount of real property. East Front street, which is the street lying on the westerly shore of Lake Merritt and San Antonio Creek, forms the initial point for numbering the houses on streets running westward therefrom, and South Front street forms the initial point for all streets running northwardly therefrom.

East Oakland, or Brooklyn, is laid out regularly. The numbering commences at First avenue, increasing towards the east, and at an imaginary extension of South Front street increasing towards the north. Fifty numbers are allotted to each block throughout the entire city, with a few special exceptions. The plan is such that the numbers in each tier of blocks are identical throughout the city.
