HOTEL ST. PAUL.

The new and magnificent building at the northeast corner of Thirteenth and Clay streets, Oakland, has been remodeled, refurnished and equipped for a modern hotel on the European plan. It has an ideal situation facing two of the principal streets of Oakland, with an outside exposure to the south and west, while in the center of the building is a very large court covered with glass extending five stories in height. There is an excellent elevator service and there are six street car lines passing within one block. The proprietor, Mr. Antoine Vayssie has had a large experience on the Pacific Coast in managing leading hotels among which was the Grand Southern, formerly of San Francisco.

The rooms are of generous proportions and are furnished with all modern conveniences. At the present time it is the largest and most complete hotel in the city of Oakland on the European plan. It contains nearly 150 rooms and it will be the purpose of the proprietor to make this hotel headquarters for tourists and globe trotters. The Hotel St. Paul is in every respect a model hotel, especially for people of refined taste, and will be conducted on fair lines at moderate prices for first-class accommodations and will be essentially a pleasant home for those who desire the best in hotel life.

On the opposite page of this issue appears a fine photo engraving of the Golden West Hotel, situated on Eighth and Franklin Streets, Oakland. In this imposing building on the ground floor, is the Oakland Tribune, one of the leading dailies of California, and the upper stories constitute the GOLDEN WEST HOTEL, containing over 100 rooms, richly furnished and under efficient management.

Messrs. Antoine Vayssie & Co. are the proprietors.
