

MONTICELLO—NAPA CITY.

207

Wilkerson John W., laborer
Williams John L., seaman
Williams William P., farmer
Wilson James, laborer

Wilson Olive, teacher
Wood Eugene A. C., farmer
Wood Joseph K., farmer
Wood Oral R., hotel keeper

J. HUNTER.

E. A. PEACOCK.

J. HUNTER & CO.,

DEALERS IN

Dry Goods, Groceries, Hats and Caps,
BOOTS AND SHOES,

Hardware, Agricultural Implements,

Paints, Oils, Putty, Glass, Coal Oil, Pure Spices, Drugs and Patent Medicines.

MONTICELLO.

CALIFORNIA.

Mountain.

(See Napa City.)

Napa City.

This, the county seat and commercial metropolis of Napa, is situated at the head of navigation on the Napa River, 37 miles from San Francisco. The location is exceptionally beautiful as well as healthy, and the city in its residence portion will compare favorably with any in the State. The most attractive feature, in an architectural point of view, is the Napa State Asylum for the insane, built at an expense of about $1,500,000. It has accommodations for 600 patients, but for the past few years has been overcrowded to such an extent that an increase of accommodation is an immediate necessity. The Court House, completed in 1879, at a cost of $70,000, is a structure worthy of the county.

Beside her ample educational facilities, provided through the medium of her public school system, Napa City supports three first-class private schools:

the Napa Collegiate Institute, the Napa Ladies' Seminary, and the Oak Mound School for boys. The first named takes rank equally with our best institutions, and enjoys more than a mere local reputation and popularity.

The city has two newspapers (both daily), the Reporter and the Register, both of which are alive to the interests of the city and the valley. There are three banking institutions, several important manufacturing firms, and the ordinary complement of other business houses. Two passenger and one freight train daily are run between Napa and San Francisco. Population of Napa City is now estimated at 5,200.

Adams Mary A. Mrs.
Adams Oliver, farmer, 148 acres
Adkins Solomon, farmer

ALDEN & CO. (A. P. Voorhees, M. Shaw and E. B. Alden) clothing, hats, caps and furnishing goods cor First and Main

Alden E. B. (Alden & Co.) res Suisun

Aldersley Ellen

Alexander McCurry, teamster

TRY
HUNTER'S
CELERY, BEEF, AND IRON.