Private Educational Institutions.

While the foregoing facts and statistics exhibit abundant and indisputable evidence of the flourishing condition of our Public Schools, there is probably no city of the same number of inhabitants, in the whole American Union—and certainly no community of the same age in the world—that can boast the same number of well conducted Private Educational Institutions. These schools for the proper training of the youth of both sexes, are ample in number, thorough in the course of study pursued, provided with all the apparatus and appliances necessary for pursuing useful scientific investigation, and in every department keeping fully up with the rapid march of improvement characteristic of the age in which we live. While the mental training of pupils is of course the paramount object of these institutions, that physical development so essential to health, happiness, and usefulness in life, is never lost sight of; and, as is the case with the Public Schools, each private institution has its gymnasium, fitted up with all the appliances necessary for healthful exercise, and the highest degree of physical development, with ample room for free and unconstrained movement. Absorbed as the great mass of our citizens are with the cares attendant upon the daily routine of business, and the unceasing rush after "the almighty dollar," too little attention is paid to the examination of and noting the growth and improvement of our educational institutions, public and private. The servants of the people who have the training of the future citizen in the former, as well as the teachers engaged in the latter, are always pleased to receive the intelligent visitor, who can understand and appreciate their efforts, and give countenance and encouragement to the noble work in which they are engaged.

The whole number of private educational institutions in San Francisco is about eighty, with an aggregate attendance of five thousand four hundred and fifty. Of this number twelve are under the control of the Catholic denomination, and the regular aggregate attendance upon the same is thirty-eight hundred.

Being governed in the order of our review by number and attendance, we commence our summary with

CATHOLIC SCHOOLS.

ST. IGNATIUS' COLLEGE.

This well known literary institution, located on Market Street between Fourth and Fifth, which is conducted by the Fathers of the Society of Jesus, was first opened for the reception of students on the fifteenth day of October, 1855, and was incorporated under the law of the State on the thirtieth of April, 1859, and empowered to confer the usual degrees and academical honors. Since its commencement this institution has been attended with the highest degree of prosperity and success. The course of instruction pursued is thorough, and comprises a complete classical, mathematical, and philosophical course of training calculated to prepare the pupil for entering upon the study of any of the professions, or commencing
