Private Educational Institutions.

The total number of colleges and private schools in this city is about seventy-five, of which seventeen are under the control of the Catholic denomination. Many of these institutions are in a very flourishing condition, and the private schools will compare favorably with the public schools for thoroughness of instruction and excellence of discipline.

From the report of the school census for 1872, it will be seen that the number of children between six and fifteen years of age that have attended private schools for the year ending June 30, 1872, was five thousand and five. The number attending public schools for the same period, twenty thousand two hundred and two.

In addition to the attendance of the private schools, there are about eleven hundred children under six years of age at the different infant schools, and about nine hundred attending the higher private schools and colleges.
