

ev. Thomas Larkin, Rev. P. Power and Rev. Edward Morrissy, Assistant Pastors.

This church, founded by the Rev. John Maginnis in 1851, was originally located on the corner of Market and Annie streets, where the congregation worshipped, and a large and flourishing Sunday School was maintained until the early part of 1872, when the present commodious edifice was completed. The interior of the new church is a vast space of eighty-two feet in width, by one hundred and twenty in length, and seventy-five feet high, to the crown of the ceiling the nave. The nave comprises the main hall, which is forty-four feet in width and on each side are aisles nineteen feet in width separated from the nave by rows of sixteen crystal columns, eight on a side, from which spring the upper walls of the main building. The ceiling is a succession of groined arches, and is beautifully frescoed in a ground of blue. The light is ample, there being thirty-six large windows in the wings and tier and five in the chancel, all led with stained glass. The windows of the chancel—which have not yet arrived from Munich—will present St. Patrick, as a center piece, with historical pictures representing scenes in the life of the patron saint of Ireland. Rows of niches are in the walls, between the windows, twelve of the most conspicuous of which hold statues of the twelve Apostles. A mammoth organ, which is intended to be the largest on the coast, is now making in Germany, and will soon be placed in the church. The lofty belfry, one hundred feet from the ground, will contain a peal of bells, the present to the church of Peter Mahue, Esq. The total cost of this great structure about $175,000. At this date St. Patrick's is the largest and most costly church edifice in the State, and its lofty spire supporting a large cross richly adorned with gold, two hundred and forty feet high, is one of the most conspicuous objects in the city.

A cemetery is attached to the church, in which the first interment was made in September, 1776. The first Indian convert was baptized on the twenty-seventh day of December, in the same year.
