Colleges and Private Schools.

Notwithstanding the excellence of the free public schools of the city and State, their exemption from direct cost to the pupil or parent, and the great interest taken in them by the public as the nurse and strength of our free institutions, colleges and private schools of great wealth, popularity and importance rise and prosper. That such institutions exist, show the great interest taken in educational matters. The public and private systems are rivals, each stimulating the other, and setting examples of enterprise, management, salaries, edifices, progress and standard of scholarships. There are in San Francisco about one hundred private schools, in which term are included the select school of a few pupils, the seminaries, commercial schools, academies, convent schools, and colleges, with their thousand students. The Census Marshal reported the number of youth attending private and church schools in this city in June, 1881 (not including Chinese) at 5,731. Many of the private schools having edifices of great capacity, cost and grand architectural appearance.

SACRED HEART COLLEGE.—The Sacred Heart College, located on the corner of Eddy and Larkin streets, is a wooden structure of three high stories and basement, and covering a large portion of the block. This is conducted by the "Christian Brothers," under the direction of Brother Genebern. The number of students is 700. The object of this institution is to give a thoroughly Christian and secular education, embracing the classical, scientific and commercial courses.

SACRED HEART PRESENTATION CONVENT.—The Sacred Heart Presentation Convent is a fine brick
