

couraged and sold the establishment and business to Mr. Biven of the Evening Herald, and the Gazette joined the "innumerable caravan" of dead journals.

THE DAILY LEADER.

After the demise of the second San Joaquin Republican, Mrs. Laura De Force Gordon, undeterred by the adverse experience of so many predecessors, boldly entered the field already white with the dry bones of departed newspapers, and adventured the publication of the Daily Leader, a pugnacious evening paper that battled for Democracy and Woman's Rights. The experience of a year or thereabout convincing the courageous lady that she had mistaken her vocation or the arena for its exercise, she removed her establishment to Sacramento, thence to Oakland, and there sold it.

THE STUDENTS' REVIEW.

Among the almost numberless productions of the press of Stockton, not the least worthy of notice is the Students' Review, a monthly literary publication of a semi-juvenile character. The first number of the Review was issued January, 1877, and has been regularly published monthly since. The editor is James Littlehale and Frank West and Austin Sperry the business managers of the paper. These young gentlemen display talents, taste and judgment in their respective departments that would reflect credit upon older and more experienced heads. In a literary point of view the Review is far superior to scores of periodicals of much higher pretension; while in its mechanical execution it is a model of typographical art, being printed at Berdine's Steam Printing establishment. The paper is self-sustaining, and deserves the encouragement and support of the community.

THE STOCKTON BANNER.

In September, 1877, Mr. A. Glaser commenced the publication of the Stockton Banner, a weekly German paper. It is a handsomely printed and, we believe, a well edited sheet. The Banner appears to be tolerably well supported, considering the comparatively limited German-speaking population of the city and valley.
